

Some ideas for role-playing:

- Two students are conversing on Skype or via a video link. You look at the calendar and together make plans for the coming year. Who will visit whom? When? What will they bring?
- Two or more students are talking about what they'll be doing after school on Friday. Your conversation includes inviting others to join in the activities you are planning.
- Two students are discussing what they and their families are planning to do on the weekend. Your conversation includes inviting the other to participate in one of the weekend activities.
- A visitor comes to the class questions them about your plans for the future.
- A student work gives a class notice about an event and asks others in a group whether they will participate, how they feel about that, and what they could bring? The others in the group respond appropriately.